Dear [Hiring Manager Name],

I am writing to express my enthusiastic interest in the [Job Title] position at [Company Name]. Having spent [Number] years as a Graphic Design Specialist, I am now transitioning into UX Design, bringing a sophisticated visual vocabulary and a deep-seated commitment to user-centric problem solving.

In my previous role at [Previous Company], I specialized in [mention a graphic design skill, e.g., brand identity or layout]. However, my focus consistently shifted toward how users interacted with my designs. This led me to pursue [mention UX certification or specific training], where I translated my aesthetic expertise into wireframing, prototyping, and usability testing. I am eager to apply my knowledge of visual hierarchy and color theory to enhance the functional accessibility of [Company Name]'s digital products.

My background in graphic design provides me with a unique advantage in UX: the ability to rapidly iterate high-fidelity prototypes that are not only intuitive but also align perfectly with brand standards. I am particularly drawn to [Company Name] because of [mention a specific project or company value], and I am confident that my blend of visual storytelling and user research will contribute to the success of your design team.

I have attached my resume and portfolio, which showcases my transition from static design to interactive, user-focused solutions. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
